

KEEPING YOUR CIGAR OFF THE GREENS

Last Updated Monday, 25 February 2008

For those who enjoy cigars on the golf course, one of the vexing problems is what to do with a lit cigar while you are actually playing.

The latest concept is a delightful accessory called the "Cigar Wedge";

It's shaped almost exactly the way it sounds, looking like another club in your bag, but designed to be pushed into the ground, with the club head facing up. Rather than a smooth edge made for striking the ball, there is a V-shaped opening wide enough to handle most cigars. The shaft is made of lightweight fiberglass and the head is treated with polymers so there's no danger of fire or other problems with placing a lit cigar on it.

The big advantages of this device are that it fits in the bag (and as an accessory, does not count against your club count), can be placed anywhere on the fairway or green and keeps your cigar level and at an easy-to-grasp height instead of close to the ground or hanging off of your club bag.
